ARMY REGULARS PLAN INVASION OF BIG ISLAND

Capt. Kneeland S. Snow of Schofield Will Lead to Kilauea

The island of Hawaii is soon to be invaded by various units of an armed force of United States regulars, all destined for the edge of the crater of Kilauea, the first organization being a company of the 1st United States Infantry of Schofield Barracks, commanded by Capt. Kneeland S. Snow. The company expects to leave for the Big Island about the first of the coming month.

This will be Capt. Snow's second visit with a company of regulars to Hilo and the Volcano. He made the first visit in September, 1913, when, after a day's stay at the National Guard armory the company, with rifles and full marching kit, hiked to the Volcano over the 32 miles of road from ocean shore to lava shore. On the coming trip the company will ride from Hilo to Greenwood over the Hawaii Consolidated Railroad and march only eight or nine miles to the camp site near the Volcano House, on the road to Kau district.

Stinging Fish Cause Trouble; Several Stung

There was plenty of excitement to surf-bathing at Waikiki Friday afternoon, because bathers were lousy dodging the little blue stinging jelly-fish called "Portuguese men-of-war." The kona wind blew them inshore in large quantities, and half a dozen bathers, men and women, were stung. "They sting just like the little green nettles we used to walk into barefoot down on the farm," said a young man who had been "torpedoed" by one a few minutes before. The tiny but troublesome things floated on the surface, hardly bigger than a dime, some looking like a bundle of blue stick threads.

Sand, plain, ordinary sand, rubbed on the stung portion is the remedy used by native Hawaiians to counteract the hurt. It should be applied at once, and is said to relieve the sting most efficiently.

Funk and Wagnall's Standard Dictionary defines the Portuguese man-of-war as "a pelagic physaloid siphonophore, especially the physalia are-thusa of the middle Atlantic."

New Zealand has an annual death rate of less than 1 per cent.

GUARD PROGRAM ON ENCAMPMENT IS CHOCK FULL

Maneuvers, Lectures, Attacks and Retreats Will Make Busy Eight Days

Chock full of practical work in military lines is the eight-day program for the 1st Infantry, National Guard, in its joint encampment with the army regulars November 12-19. The program was issued by Brig. Gen. Samuel I. Johnson yesterday afternoon.

In addition to drill maneuvers of all sorts, instruction is to be given by a course of lectures on military tactics. November 12, which is Sunday, will be given over to assembly and marching to encampment and making camp.

The next day will take up extended order work and there will be lectures on fire direction. In the evening inspection of arms and parade will be held. Similar maneuvers will be held on the third day with the additional feature of a lecture on security and information for non-coms and privates.

Attacks by companies upon a position outlined by flags will be the feature of the fourth day in addition to other work. On the following day the battalion will attack, and on the fifth day the regiment will swing into an attack lasting for two hours.

On the seventh day instead of attacking, the regiment will take up the defensive against an enemy theoretically superior in force. Tactics of retreat will be worked out fully, the entire maneuvers lasting for five hours.

The eighth day will be given over to breaking camp and marching again to the armory.

COMPANY I PLANNING TO CAMP AT VOLCANO

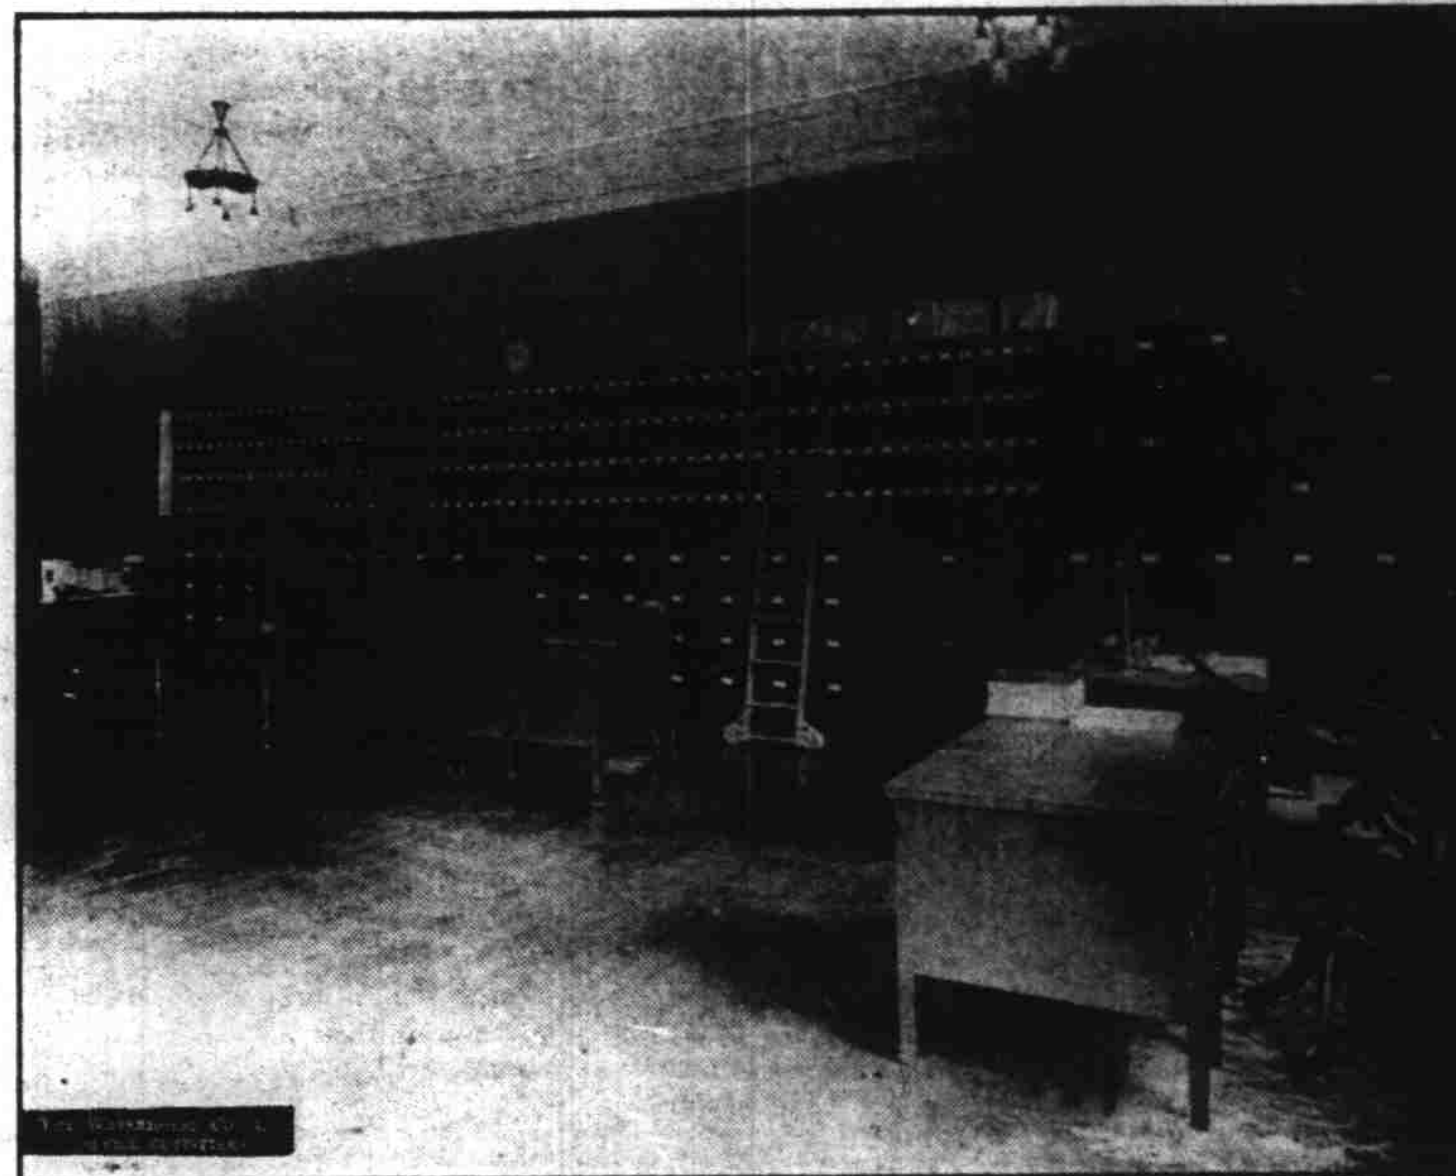

Capt. R. B. Brambila, Company I, 1st Infantry, is planning to visit the volcano with about 50 of his men as soon as the military camp site near there is completed. The company will spend about 10 days at the camp, being quartered in the new building. The entire camp will accommodate about 800 men when completed. Capt. Brambila will probably leave with his company about November 1.
